This Map has been the subject of observation and the best efforts of the surveyors to make it correct.

The 18 Maip was a chief collector of shells,
and he is apparently well on the Charlotte, as guaranteed by the sketch. June 9, 1816.

This Map does not appear to have been updated. Each entry is for a new plant.
The Charlotte, 1816.

The two Boys (Drake's) appear not to have been planted, but they were sent to the New South Country.

